

PART I

The Ghost at Blackwood Statio

A dead judge. A clock stopped at 11:47. Seven names that should no

OFFICIAL STORY SYNOPSIS

When Judge Edmund Harrow is discovered dead in a locked room at Blackwood Station, the evidence seems to contradict itself. The station clock has stopped at 11:47, old records place Harrow's death eleven years earlier, and a ledger lists names tied to events that official history says never happened. Investigator Adrian Vale follows the trail with Detective Emily Carter, neuroscientist Dr. Leena Rao, and systems expert Jonah Mercer. Their search uncovers a vanished train, missing records, and witnesses whose memories disagree in unsettling ways. A woman appears at the edge of the case, offering fragments of a story she cannot fully explain. As Adrian pieces together the station's past, the investigation begins to look less like a haunting and more like a carefully maintained secret. The ledger is not simply a record of the dead: it is evidence of people and events someone has tried to remove from history. To close the case, Adrian must decide what to reveal, what can be proved, and how to protect the people whose names remain on the page.

KEY CHARACTERS
Adrian Vale · Emily Carter · Dr. Leena Rao · Jonah Mercer · Elise Voss

STORY ELEMENTS
Locked-room mystery · identity · hidden records · unreliable memory

This document is a short promotional synopsis for readers, reviewers, and retailers. It intentionally does not contain the complete manuscript or full chapter text.